☞ The reader may often be disappointed in the value affixed to a variety of silver pieces, the size of which might appear to warrant a higher price; but, it must be remembered that in many countries, particularly in Germany, the standard of fineness is much reduced in the Coins of smaller denominations; it is therefore a very usafe method of valuing many foreign silver coins, by comparing their sizes with American silver.

Engraved on wood, from the original Coin, by J. W. CRR, 75 Nassau Street, New York.

PREFACE.

THE present work is intended to supply a deficiency, which must long have been apparent to the BUSINESS COMMUNITY. The immense number of foreign Coins in circulation throughout this country, and the difficulty which most persons have in determining their value who have not made the subject their study, must render a work, like the present, containing their likenesses, names and value, of the greatest importance.

The present edition contains nearly TWO HUNDRED ENGRAVINGS OF COINS, executed in the first style, and is valuable not only as a record of business, but as a specimen of art.

The work will be published every three months, or oftener should it appear advisable, and large additions of Coins will be made to each issue, until it shall embrace every Coin in circulation as far as they can be ascertained; and every engraving given, may be relied upon as perfect.

The Coins being all arranged by nations, and each piece having its name affixed, there can be no difficulty in discovering the piece sought for.

It will be found that many of the Coins command a premium in Commerce, and consequently fluctuate somewhat in value. I of course, give the current value at the date of the publication, and I buy all the Coins at the prices quoted, subject, however, to the ordinary variations in the money market. Should the Coins not command the price quoted, at any particular time, the holder will always be safe in retaining them until a demand arises, when the price will of course increase. In order to obtain the premium, however, the piece must be without blemish, and perfect in every respect.

☞ The proprietor solicits attention to the table inside the cover, containing the weight, fineness and value per dwt, of a variety of Gold Coins. To the BANKS, BROKERS and JEWELLERS, as well as to BUSINESS MEN generally, he thinks it will be extremely useful.
